A famous director planned to film a beautiful sunset over the ocean, so that the audiences could see the main characters in front of it at the end of the film as they said goodbye to each other for ever. He sent his camera crew out one evening to film the sunset for him.

The next morning he asked: "Have you got the sunset?"

"No, sir," the cameraman answered.

The director was angry. "Why not?" he asked.

"Well, sir, we're on the east coast here, and the sun sets in the west. We can get you a sunrise over the sea, if necessary, but not a sunset."

"But I want a sunset!" the director shouted. "Go to the airport, take the next flight to the west coast, and film it there."

But then a young secretary had an idea. "Why don't you film a sunrise," she suggested, "and then play it backwards? Then it'll look like a sunset."

"That's a very good idea!" Then director said. Then he turned to the camera crew and said; "Tomorrow morning I want you to get me a beautiful sunrise over the sea."

The camera crew went out early the next morning and filmed a bright sunrise over the beach in the middle of a beautiful bay. Then at nine o'clock they took it to the director. "Here it is, sir," they said, and showed it to him. He liked it very much. They all went into the studio.

"All right," the director explained, "now our main characters are going to say goodbye. Run the film backwards so that we can see the "sunset" behind them."

The "sunset" began, but a few seconds later the director suddenly put his face in his hands and shouted to the camera crew to stop.

The birds in the film were flying backwards, and the waves on the sea were going away from the beach.
